2019's National Moon Day Celebrates a 50th Anniversary

National Moon Day is observed annually on July 20 to commemorate the day man first walked on the moon. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the Apollo 11 landing on July 20, 1969 —when Neil Armstrong said these unforgettable words as he stepped onto the lunar surface at 10:56 p.m. EDT: "One small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

Buzz Aldrin joined Armstrong soon thereafter and described the moon's surface as "magnificent desolation." The two astronauts explored for two and a half hours, collecting 47.5 pounds of lunar material and taking photographs.

They left behind an American flag, a patch honoring the fallen Apollo 1 crew, and a plaque on one of Eagle's legs. It reads, "Here men from the planet Earth first set foot upon the moon. July 1969 A.D. We came in peace for all mankind."

Where were you on that day? Wherever it was, you were most likely watching television. Caught up in the thrill of the adventure, more than half a billion people around the globe watched the live broadcasts of the moon landing and witnessed history being made.

NASA and many other organizations throughout the country will be celebrating this 50th anniversary with special events. For example, some museums and science centers are going to extend hours into the evening so highlights from July 20, 1969 can be viewed, reenacted, and celebrated at the time they actually happened.

How can you observe National Moon Day? Talk to family and friends about your memories of the moon landing. View the moon through a telescope and explore the surface. Start a discussion about space exploration and how it's influenced the world today. Use #NationalMoonDay to share on social media.

Relish the Tastiness of Pickle Month

Oh, pickles! There's something else to celebrate in July — National Pickle Month. Here are fun facts to get the party started:

- Julius Caesar's soldiers ate pickled cucumbers as health aids.
- Cleopatra claimed pickles contributed to her beauty.
- If all of the pickles consumed each year were placed end to end, they would reach the moon and back 8.25 times.

Dill pickles are the most popular but other options include sweet, gherkin, polish, lime, and bread and butter.

Whenever you're "in a pickle" over communications technology, contact Runestone Telecom for friendly help.

Why Buffering Occurs and How You Can Minimize It

When you're excited about watching a movie or TV program via streaming, the last thing you want to see is the annoying rotating arrow or spinning circle that indicates buffering is taking place. Before we share tips on how to minimize buffering, let's start with an explanation of why it happens.

Buffering refers to downloading a certain amount of data before starting to play the video. One common form of buffering occurs when your internet connection is too slow to stream a video in real time. Your device will buffer the video data and start playback when there is enough to prevent video lag. If the streaming video reaches the point where it has to wait until more information is available, it will pause, and you'll again see the loading screen. Once the video stream catches up, it plays again.

This process can take just a few seconds or might last several minutes. If the video is long, you might encounter several buffering sessions during your viewing time.

If you experience buffering often and are frustrated by it, you may want to upgrade your internet speed. A slow connection will delay the delivery of audio and video information, in which case you will see the loading screen. A fast connection can stream movies and TV programs virtually without interruption and easily accommodate high-definition or 4K video. For an optimal streaming experience, we recommend an internet speed of 25 Mbps or higher.

An additional consideration is how fast your router can send the video and other information to the computers, media streamers, smart TVs, and internet-enabled Blu-ray disc players connected to it. Routers designed to work with streaming video, sometimes called AV routers, can stream more data, reducing playback interruptions. When looking for wireless and power-line adapter accessories, check the speed ratings; they indicate whether they're optimized for AV, so you can stream high-definition video and audio.

If you have questions related to buffering or need help selecting a faster internet plan, call Runestone Telecom at 320-986-2013 or stop by our office.
